MULTIPLE-CHOICE CLOZE

[each answer worth 2 points]

Read the text below and then decide which expression – A, B, C or D – best fits each space. Mark your answers on the separate answer sheet.

How (not) to leave your dream job once it becomes a nightmare

Actor Stephen Fry is (1) ____ for brilliant comic performances in numerous TV programmes and films, but in 1995 he was (2) ____ spotlight for a different reason. Having shot to fame in BBC's "A Bit of Fry and Laurie" he walked out on the show after just three performances.

He wasn't the first star to have successfully acted, won the fame they'd (3) ____ and then found the dream to be a nightmare. Seventy years earlier, a young Ernest Hemingway found himself limited by a contract and (4) ____ to change his publisher. So he wrote a book, Torrents of Spring, which he knew was so bad that his publisher would reject it.

For those hoping to become an opera star, here's a warning story: opera singer Roberto Alagna, well respected in the classical music world, was booed at Milan's La Scala (5) ____ performing the opera "Aida" and walked out of the production. His understudy (6) ____ over for the rest of the performance wearing street clothes.

Then there are the normal people in normal jobs who end up leaving abnormally. Steven Slater, a flight attendant, suddenly became the (7) ____ attention in 2010 when he left his job by jumping out of the plane on a slide. Fortunately, the plane was on the ground. YouTube and Twitter helped him to become (8) ____ success as his story zoomed around the internet.

And for those who aim to become a bus driver, don't follow William Cimillo's 1947 example. While on his daily routine in the Bronx, New York, Cimillo clearly longed (9) ____ the open road. He took a detour of 1,300 miles and ended up in Florida. After being arrested for the (10) ____ of the bus, he was asked why he'd done it. He replied: "The New York traffic gets you. It's like driving in a squirrel cage." Remarkably, he got his job back.

READING COMPREHENSION

[each answer worth 2 points]

Read texts A–E and answer the ten questions below. For each answer, choose one of the sections in the article, A–E. Mark your answers on the separate answer sheet. Each section may be chosen more than once.

A

I'm often accused of living in a parallel universe. After all, I create an unreal world based on what I see, feel and experience. It had always been a part of my life, but I never had aspirations to earn a living from it until a cousin of mine entered a short story I'd written into a national competition and I won! It was a bolt out of the blue since I knew nothing about the competition. The cash prize was substantial, so I shared it with my enterprising cousin. Now she tries to claim commission when a book of mine gets published, not that she has any luck!

B

I love the freedom of my job. You are out on the streets delivering and there is no one to bother you. Well, with the exception of the local wildlife of course. I've had a few close encounters with a canine jaw or two but no actual bites. I'm a fast runner when need be and I hope I won't change with age. I like the ordinariness of the job. I'm not entirely sure that some of the letters I deliver last very long, as in some houses I can hear great snarling and ripping noises as I walk away from the door. Seriously though, it can give you a warm feeling inside sometimes when someone is waiting for something special and they look so happy or relieved when you deliver it.

C

It's not a job for the fainthearted, that's for sure. But on the other hand, I think people make it out to be worse or even riskier than it is. The majority of the time, things run very smoothly, well as smoothly as they can with a building containing over a thousand kids. It's a fascinating job when you think about it, all those little personalities developing in front of your eyes. The wonderful thing is when they stay in touch and come back on regular visits to keep you up to date on how their life is panning out. And then you feel really old as their children come along and you end up teaching the next generation.

D

My brothers always say that I've never had a proper career to pursue. That's just because they are sometimes jealous, since they are stuck in nine-to-five jobs. We have always been competitive and we still are in some ways. They crave my freedom, but I admire their skills as fathers. In general, though, they are supportive of my job and they've helped me in my career a lot. I do sometimes wonder if I've missed out on the traditional daily routine. Maybe the stability of a 'proper' job would be more rewarding in the long run. It must be great to have workmates that you've known for years.

E

I wouldn't say my job is particularly stressful or dangerous. Some of the other drivers grumble about traffic and rude passengers but I think that you get what you give and if I give people a cheery good morning, they are going to respond in a positive way towards me. That's not to say there aren't a fair few dimwits on the road. Some drivers think they have a divine right to go wherever they want without paying any attention to fellow road users, and others have a thing about buses and feel obliged to overtake them at all costs and in any situation, regardless of safety. There's a real sense of camaraderie among the drivers and we have a good laugh together in the depot canteen.

Which section mentions the following?

21. A family member taking credit for someone's success.
22. The risk of being physically attacked.
23. People anxious for news.
24. Not intending to follow the career they have ended up doing.
25. Treating people as you wish to be treated yourself.
26. Needing a certain amount of courage.
27. Longing for a more conventional life.
28. A situation that makes you realise you are ageing.
29. Experiencing team spirit.
30. Putting other people at risk.
